

CALL FOR PAPERS

The Public Sphere is a journal of international policy studies produced by postgraduate students at the London School of Economics and Political Science's Master of Public Administration (MPA). The MPA provides a rigorous programme in economics, econometrics and political science to students from a variety of nationalities and backgrounds.

The Public Sphere Journal publishes evidence-based research in economic policy, public management, international affairs, development studies and social policy. The journal offers contributors and readers an active space to rethink, critically analyse and address important policy problems. The Public Sphere welcomes submissions that contribute to vibrant debate from advanced students in relevant degree programs, academics and practitioners.

On top of research papers, the Public Sphere Journal is exploring new types of articles to publish. We are thus calling for policy briefs on the topic “Policy-making in a digital age”, which will be published in a special section of the journal.

Please submit articles to thepublicspherejournal@gmail.com by Sunday 27th August 2017 including the following:

- The full text of your policy paper and/or your policy brief must be in Microsoft Word format (.doc or .docx). Please see further specifications for the articles in the style guide below.
- A cover sheet in a separate document containing your contact information (including full name, institution and e-mail address) and a brief biography of yourself (maximum 1-2 sentences; include your year/place of schooling and any relevant experience that bears on the content of your article). No identifying information should be elsewhere on your submission.

- Any appendices or supplementary material. We strongly encourage you to include any relevant photographs, charts, or graphs within the body of the article itself. Please include a copy of your statistical software coding if applicable.

Failure to comply with these policies may disqualify your article from consideration. The publisher retains the right to change formatting and type setting. There is no submission fee.

For further information, please contact: thepublicspherejournal@gmail.com.

Style guide for submissions

If you wish to submit your article to The Public Sphere Journal, please read the following important information carefully.

While The Public Sphere will make every effort to respond to all submissions, it cannot guarantee that all submitters will receive a response. Confirmation of receipt will be made. Please contact The Public Sphere at thepublicspherejournal@gmail.com if you do not receive a confirmation e-mail within two weeks of submitting.

The opinions expressed within The Public Sphere do not necessarily reflect those of the journal, its staff or affiliates, or those of the London School of Economics and Political Science.

SUBMISSIONS

Articles can take the following forms:

- Policy Papers: Original, research-based articles that fall between 5,000 – 6,000 words. Please include relevant graphs, data tables, maps, coding or any other supplementary material. It should include an abstract of maximum 300 words.
- Policy Briefs: Findings of analysis or research that draw implications or recommendations for policy and practice on the topic “Policy-making in a digital age”. It should be between 1,500 and 2,000 words, including an executive summary.

All articles should be the work of the authors, though writing done as part of previous class work is welcome. By submitting your article, you are confirming that your work is your own and not previously published. We encourage submissions from authors who have no previous publications in academic journals. All articles should be both relevant and accessible to a general population interested in public policy related fields.

If graphs are included in the paper, the original data should be available, although it is not necessary to submit it. The original data might be requested for formatting purposes. Since the printed edition is in grayscale, all figures and photographs should be apt to be changed to grayscale without losing definition. The online edition will be in colour.

References should follow the Harvard method, as explained by LSE's guide for citing and referencing:

EDITORIAL REVIEW PROCESS

All papers selected for submission will undergo review by the Editorial team (consisting of graduate students) and the Advisory Board (consisting of professors or advanced scholars on relevant subjects) of The Public Sphere. Authors should be aware that they will be expected to revise submitted articles prior to publication.

In order to facilitate the review and the formatting processes, please clearly identify sections and subsections, as well as the citations for figures and photographs.

The Public Sphere Journal reserves the right to exclude any article from inclusion in final publication at any point in this process. The Public Sphere also maintains the right to edit, delete, or change any aspect of an article at its own discretion. Any major changes will be communicated to the author prior to publication. In addition, The Public Sphere may reproduce, excerpt, or otherwise utilize published material in its future publications, website or events without the explicit consent of the author. The Public Sphere maintains a commitment to protecting the work of its authors and to ensuring that this work is not reproduced unlawfully or without the author's permission by other parties.
